UNIT THREE:
Rebirth, Reform and Exploration

• The traditional art history survey presents a historical narrative that, by selectively mapping development of the so-called Old World, constructs the idea of the West.

• One problem with this model is that in privileging Europe, the Old World is placed in an oppositional relationship to the rest of the world, which tends to be marginalized, if not neglected.

  ▪ A focus upon early modernity and interconnectedness of the Atlantic regions presents a more comprehensive approach to the study of art.

• The early modern Atlantic World encompasses what today is known as Western Europe — specifically Italy, Spain, France, Germany, England, Belgium, and the Netherlands — and those territories in the Americas that were part of the Spanish empire.

• Study of this art historical period, and specifically of the European material traditionally identified by the more familiar labels of Renaissance and Baroque, (which we will study later in the year) is canonical in the study of Art History. That means that historically, it was a very important part of the study of Art History.

• There has been a lot written about it. People have been studying the art and artists of the Renaissance for a very long time.

  ▪ Most primary source material is housed in archives and libraries worldwide and includes works of art both in situ and in private and public collections.

  ▪ An immense body of secondary scholarly literature also exists.

Early Renaissance Study Guide

The arts of 15th century Europe reflected an interest in

• classical models
• enhanced naturalism
• Christianity
• Increasingly formalized artistic training.

Developments in the form and use of visual elements enhanced the illusion of naturalism such as:

• linear and atmospheric perspective
• composition
• color
• figuration
• narrative

The emergence of academies redefined art training and the production and identity of the artist by introducing more structured, theoretical curricula in centralized educational institutions.

Corporate and individual patronage informed the production, content, form, and display of art — from panel painting, altarpieces, sculpture, and print to myriad decorative arts, such as metalwork and textiles.

Art work was displayed in:

• Churches
• Chapels
• Convents
• Palaces
• Civic buildings
Art performed various functions:

- propagandistic
- commemorative
- educational
- devotional
- ritual
- decorative
